

A MONEY MACHINE THEY BUY, BUT IT MAKES NOTHING

Max and Lewis, Each Stung for $1,000, Accuse Each Other of Trickery.

Lewis Lefkowitz and Max Schwartz, east side business men, partners in pool and billiards for fourteen years, were arraigned against each other in Yorkville Police Court today. Max was a prisoner on Lewis's charge that Max had helped separate him from $1,000 by trick and device.

It appears that the friends went into partnership to buy a machine for manufacturing money from an ex-employee of the Treasury Department. This is a variation of the old green-goods game. In this particular instance both Schwartz and Lefkowitz declare they were victimized.

As Lewis Tells It.
Their stories are almost identical, save that each accuses the other of putting up the job. Here is the version of Lefkowitz, who is in the leather business at No. 60 East Houston street:

"In October Schwartz comes to me and tells me that he knows a man that used to work in the Treasury in Washington and carried away a machine that would make money. The capacity of the machine, he said, was $10,000. He suggests that we buy the machine for $1,000 apiece, take $10,000 out of it and split up the $9,000 profit.

"I meet Schwartz at the Waldorf on the night of Oct. 12. Schwartz introduces me to a man with a package under his arm. This is the man with the money machine. He says the Waldorf is too public and we had better go to Madison Square to do our business.

"On the way down Fifth avenue I notice that Max has got his back out of his pocket and is skinning some bills off. That makes me suspicious, but I think maybe he had more than $1,000 in the roll and was skinning it down to $1,000. We all three go to a dark place in Madison Square and the stranger slips me the package and we hand over our bankrolls. I never saw the stranger since.

"We walk over to Twenty-fourth street and Avenue A, and Max suggests I operate the machine and get some money out of it. I unwrap the machine and turn the crank and nothing but white paper comes out.

"I told Max I was stung the way he was surprised. He put up a great holler and said we were both suckers, but we shouldn't say anything about it. I kept quiet and was good friends with Max, but I got more and more suspicious and yesterday I went to Headquarters and told how I was tricked and they advised me to have Max arrested."

Now Listen to Max.

Here is the story of Max Schwartz, a decorator, with an establishment at No. 372 East Eleventh street.

"In October Lewis comes to me and says he has an old friend that used to work in the Treasury in Washington and got away with a machine like the Government uses for making money. I go up to the Waldorf on the night of Oct. 28 and meet there a stranger who is introduced by Lewis as the man with the money machine. The stranger says the Waldorf is too public a place and suggests that we go to Madison Square.

"On the way down Fifth avenue I notice Lewis peeling some bills off his bankroll. I figure that if Lewis is going to double-cross his friend I can declare myself in, so I skinned $500 off of my roll. We go to a dark place in Madison Square and slipped our rolls to the stranger, and he handed us the machine wrapped up in paper.

"We take the machine over to Twenty-fourth street and Avenue A, where we take the paper off and Lewis suggests that we run out some of those dollar bills. The machine doesn't turn out anything but strips of white paper. "Ever since I have been getting bills with Lewis, but I kept getting more suspicious the way he acted. I was going to have him arrested yesterday and told him so, but while I am busy at my store he hustles down to Headquarters and beats me to it."

K. Henry Rosenberg appeared in court as counsel for Schwartz. At his request the examination was postponed until Monday and bail was fixed at $2,000.

"BANANA ANNIE" PLEADS GUILTY OF ACCIDENT FAKES

Seventeen Concerns Paid Her $5,000 to Settle Claims in Less Than Four Years.

Mrs. Anna Strula, better known as "Banana Annie," a middle-aged housewife, who had been on trial before a jury in the Court of General Sessions on a charge of grand larceny in the second degree, this afternoon pleaded guilty and turned herself over to the mercy of the court. Judge Tompkins remanded her to the Tombs for one week, when sentence will be pronounced.

By her own confession, this woman since June 1, 1908, has collected damages from seventeen corporations and companies on false claims. She suffered from a chronic affection which bore the physical appearance of a newly inflicted injury.

Her favorite trick was to pretend to trip and fall, aboard a car or on the steps of an elevated station. When she was picked up, apparently in great pain, a first feeling would be found under her, and in the suit which followed she would claim that she had slipped on the steps of the car. Usually the cases were settled by compromise. In less than four years, she admitted, she had made more than $5,000.

The specific instance which led to her indictment was the collection of $500 from the New York Central Railroad as a result of a simulated accident at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street and Park avenue. Before trial she pleaded guilty, but was permitted to withdraw this plea on the ground that she was being persecuted by railroad companies.

Today, when she saw the burden of proof against her, she owned up. Mrs. Strula told the judge that she had deceived even her own son and all her friends.

Christmas Jewelry Buyers Coming in Throngs to Lamberts

The Christmas Jewelry buyers are coming to the Lambert store, and those who have copies of the Lambert Catalog for 1911, as thousands have, knew what they wanted before they came in, and they found it, whether it was a pair of handy pins or a fine watch, adjusted and regulated by experts, or a splendid medallion ablaze with diamonds.

The Lambert Catalog is a book that makes good.
It points out the way to pleasant, profitable and money-saving buying of jewelry, and it is full of pictures photographed direct from almost 4,000 articles of diamond and gold jewelry, silverware, watches, etc. Everybody saves money on every purchase at Lamberts.

Invest in Diamonds at Lambert Prices

Here is a group of Solitaire Diamond Engagement Rings, solid 14-karat and 18-karat gold and platinum, from the Lambert factory. There are others from $10 to $1,500. Our Catalog illustrates many of them.
In the present conditions the purchase of high grade diamonds such as we buy for spot cash of the cutters in Europe and import direct, is a hard-headed investment, for, while the output of really fine diamonds is decreasing, the DEMAND GROWS FAST. We bought fine diamonds in large quantities a year ago, anticipating the continued rise in prices.
Here is an additional economy for those who buy diamonds at Lamberts.

Christmas Watches All Guaranteed

The Christmas watches we exhibit in solid gold, gold-filled and sterling cases, with the best movements—Elgin, Waltham, Hamilton, Lambert and Longines—were all deliberately examined by expert watchmakers before the Christmas rush began and were put into perfect condition. They are all ready to begin a lifetime of faithful service. Nobody ever yet regretted buying a watch at Lamberts.
